

Current VLBI Activities in China

Zhi-Qiang Shen

¹Shanghai Astronomical Observatory, Chinese Academy of Sciences, 80 Nandan Road, Shanghai 200030, China
zshen@shao.ac.cn

Abstract

It takes about 30 years for the establishment of the Chinese VLBI network (CVN). Nowadays, the CVN of five VLBI stations plus a correlation center has gradually but steadily performed astrophysical and geodetic observations as well as the VLBI tracking of space probes. More activities are expected with the ever-increasing international collaborations, such as the East Asian VLBI etc.

I will present a status report of the VLBI activities in China.